

SUMMARY

For ten years New York University's Moving Image Archiving and Preservation program has been training students to manage and preserve collections of audiovisual material. This paper describes the program, looking particularly at how it trains people to manage in a rapidly-changing digital environment.